Trying to Conceive?

Introducing The Stork® ...

The Stork has been designed to help people become pregnant. Whether you are just thinking about starting a family or you have been actively trying to conceive for longer, let The Stork aid you in your chances of conceiving.

The Stork uses cervical cap insemination to help with becoming pregnant. Cervical cap insemination is an effective technique previously available only through your doctor or clinic. The Stork allows you to use cervical cap insemination in the privacy of your home as a complement to natural intercourse.

The Stork can help with common fertility difficulties such as:

Motility issues with sperm

Low sperm count

Unfavourable vaginal environment

How Does The Stork® Work?

The Stork is designed to be used as a “first-step” for you and your partner when trying to conceive before advancing into more costly, in-clinic treatments. Its simple design includes two main parts - the Conceptacle® and the applicator. The Conceptacle consists of a silicone, condom-like sheath with a silicone cervical cap resting within the sheath. The Conceptacle is used to collect the semen during natural intercourse but can alternatively be used with donor sperm.

The applicator cradles the cervical cap and guides it through the vagina to the cervix. This places the sperm near the opening of the cervix and allows the sperm to stay close to the area it needs to be to swim up through to get to the egg.

Suggested use of the device is right before and during ovulation - the three most fertile days of the woman's monthly cycle. The Stork can be used in conjunction with ovulation predictor methods to help to determine the most fertile days of the monthly cycle.

Complete Instructions for Use are provided with The Stork device. Please read these carefully prior to use. For a video version of the instructions for Use, please visit our website: www.thestorkconception.co.uk.
